TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber.

June 15th, 1914.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening. Mayor Alexander in the chair.

Present—Reeve Denison and Councillors Wiseman, Walters, Waller, Carson and Dickinson.

The minutes of the last session were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from Arthur B. Clarke asking that he be given charge of one of the new sprinklers when they were put into commission. His offer was $3.50 per day.

Laid on the table.

A communication was read from the Napanee Iron Works Company asking to be given a chance to tender on the man-hole castings when the Robert street sewer was being constructed. Heretofore these castings had been secured out of town, and they were satisfied they could furnish them for the same price, if not a trifle cheaper.

Laid on the table.

A communication was read from Mr. Brooks, proprietor of the Hay Bay ferry, asking the town for a grant at least $100. If some assistance was not given, the ferry would have to be discontinued, as it was a losing proposition.

Laid on the table.

A petition was read from Elizabeth Blewitt, asking that the carters be made to change their stand from their present place to the west end of the market or some other location.

Referred to the Police Committee to investigate.

Coun. Carson informed the council that the town treasurer has intimated to him that he was unable to collect the back rents, and also amounts due on sidewalks, owing the town.

On motion of Coun. Carson, seconded by Coun. Wiseman it was resolved that all back rents, and arrears due on cement walks be handed to the town solicitor for immediate collection.

The Streets Committee reported that they had purchased from the County of Lennox and Addington, a metal crusher at a cost of $50.

Report adopted.

A report of F. W. Barrett, Sanitary Inspector, made to the Medical Officer of Health, was laid before the council by Coun. Waller and read by the clerk. The report was a lengthy one, and went into considerable detail concerning sanitary conditions of the business section of the town as well as the residential section.

Moved by Coun. Waller, seconded by Coun. Wiseman, that the report be received, and that a committee be appointed to confer with the Board of Health in reference to any action that might be taken in respect of the said report. Carried.

The Streets Committee further reported as follows:

"That we recommend the keeping of one account for the construction of all cement walks built during 1914, under the Local Improvement By-Law and that the cost per foot be ascertained upon the completion of the said walks, and an equal pro-rata charge

Liberal Leader Greeted by An Overflow Ho

One of the best speeches ever in Napanee was delivered on Tuesday afternoon by Newton W. Rowe C., leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, to an audience that filled town hall to overflowing, and rendered the address of the Liberal leader with great enthusiasm.

All who heard Mr. Rowe were deeply impressed with earnestness and realized that in the people have a leader to be proud of, and who will successfully lead his party to victory on June 29th.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. F. S. Wartman, and he called Mr. J. E. Aylsworth, Newburgh, spoke a few words expressing pleasure in meeting Mr. Rowe, wishing Mr. Madole success in contest.

Mr. M. S. Madole then made a but spirited speech reiterating stand on the temperance question expressing his views on Education the various other issues before electors at this time.

Mr. J. T. D. Lindsay, of Toronto who accompanies Mr. Rowe on tour, dealt in an interesting manner with the finances of the province, and the fallacies of the campaign as issued by the Whitney Government in which is made statements much at variance with the figures published in the Government report. Mr. Lindsay also gave some reason why the electors are called at date. Differences in the Cabinet as leadership on the retirement of James Whitney forces the issue with a new lease of power the Cabinet would have four more years to see their differences.

Mr. N. W. Rowe expressed his regret at the defeat of Mr. Madole years ago and asked the electors to send Mr. Madole to Toronto with good majority. During Mr. Rowe's tour he has been promised Conservative support every place in which has appeared. A great movement going over the Province and the electors are lining up on the issues at hand before them. The Liberal party is losing any support it may have from the liquor interests, as the liquor men are all openly opposing him.

The speaker was confident public opinion in Ontario is against the bar and will support him in this issue. A stirring in the public interest which is a hopeful sign of the time. Dealing with educational matters gave the Government credit in the organization of the Provincial university. Speaking of public and high schools he deplored the inadequate supply of properly trained teachers and the inactivity of the department in seeking to remedy matters and cure an adequate supply of qualified teachers with the result that our Moved by Coun. Wiseman, that the report be received, and that a committee be appointed to confer with the Board of Health in reference to any action that might be taken in respect of the said report. Carried.

The Streets Committee further reported as follows :

"That we recommend the keeping of one account for the construction of all cement walks built during 1914, under the Local Improvement By-Law and that the cost per foot be ascertained upon the completion of the said walks, and an equal pro-rata charge be levied against all the walks so constructed, and the Finance Committee be constructed to make such financial arrangements as may be necessary to carry this into effect, if recommended by the town solicitor.

Report adopted.

Ex-Mayor Stacey was present and was invited to occupy a chair inside the chair.

The Town Property Committee were instructed to have the ditch bordering on the town's dumping ground cleaned out and placed in a sanitary condition.

On motion of the Police Committee were empowered to confer with the Board of Health on the report of the Sanitary Inspector.

Moved by Coun. Waller, seconded by Coun. Walters, and resolved: "That in view of the importance of Napanee as a distributing centre, and as a centre of a large and growing population, it is very desirable that the Canadian Northern Railway, when it builds its permanent station for Napanee, to build a commodious and modern structure, and as conveniently located as possible, as we believe that an up-to-date building as a depot, will be mutually advantageous to both the citizens of Napanee and the district in general, and also to the Railway Company. Also that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the company. Carried.

Moved by Coun. Wiseman, seconded by Coun. Carson, that the claim for arrears made by Mr. Geo. Stevens, who has charge of the fire engine, be referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee. Also that they report in reference to the advisability of continuing Mr. Stevens in the capacity of engineer.

The clerk was instructed to purchase the necessary number of dog tags as per request of Chief Graham.

On motion of Councillors Waller and Carson the sum of $50 was granted towards the maintenance of the Hay Bay ferry.

On motion of Councillors Carson and Wiseman, Arthur B. Clark was appointed to have charge of one of the new street sprinklers at a salary of $3.50 per day.

The committee for the Napanee Iron Works was referred to the Streets Committee with power to act.

Liberal Leader Greeted by An Overflow House

One of the best speeches ever heard in Napanee was delivered on Tuesday noon by Newton W. Rowell, K. leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, to an audience that filled the hall to overflowing, and received the address of the Liberal leader with great enthusiasm.

Mr. Rowell spoke deeply impressed with his earnestness and realized that in him people have a leader to be proud of and who will successfully carry the party to victory on June 29th.

The meeting was presided over by F. S. Wartman, and he called on J. E. Aylsworth, Newburgh, who made a few words expressing his confidence in meeting Mr. Rowell and in Mr. Madole's success in this election.

Mr. M. S. Madole then made a short spirited speech reiterating his confidence in the temperance question and expressing his views on Education and various other issues before the election at this time.

J. F. D. Lindsay, of Toronto, accompanied Mr. Rowell on his visit, and dealt in an interesting manner with the finances of the province, showing the fallacies of the campaign book issued by the Whitney Government, which is made statements very far in variance with the figures shown in the Government reports. Lindsay also gave some reasons why the electors are called at this time. Differences in the Cabinet as to the retirement of Sir Charles Whitney forced the issue and a new lease of power to the Cabinet had four more years to settle the differences.

Mr. N. W. Rowell expressed his regret at the defeat of Mr. Madole three years ago and asked the electors to support Mr. Madole to Toronto with a majority. During Mr. Rowell's speech he has been promised Conservative support every place in which he appeared. A great movement is going over the Province and the voters are lining up on the issues at present before them. The Liberal party, giving any support it may have had the liquor interests, as the liquor is all openly opposing him.

The speaker was confident public opinion in Ontario is against the open sale and will support him in this. A stirring in the public interest has been a hopeful sign of the times. Dealing with educational matters he pointed out the Government credit in the reorganization of the Provincial University. Speaking of public and high schools he deplored the inadequate supply of properly trained teachers and the inactivity of the department seeking to remedy matters and secure an adequate supply of qualified teachers with the result that many

I. O. D. E.

Members of the "United Empire Loyalist" Chapter, I.O.D.E., chose a glorious day in June for their visit to Mount Pleasant school, North Fredericksburgh, when on the afternoon of the 12th inst., they took a delightful motor drive to this beautifully situated school house (one of the oldest ones of the County) where all were most cordially welcomed by the teacher, Mr. W. Percy Shorey, many of the pupils mothers and other friends. The school was most tastefully decorated with both cultivated and wild flowers, flags being prominently placed, and well-executed drawings adorning the black-boards, in honor of the occasion.

As the date chosen was so close to examination time, the Chapter was unfortunately deprived of the assistance of the pupils on the programme, the onus of which, therefore, rested with the visitors.

By some happy circumstance, possibly, like the poet, the ladies were inspired by the glory of a June day—for does he not truly exclaim—"O June, dear June, now God be praised for June"! At any rate, the bright sunshine coming through the western windows bedecked with flowers, making dancing shadows on the floor and the pupils' eager, upturned faces, filled the minds of those who were to take part in the proceedings, with the desire to leave some lasting impressions in the hearts and recollections of the young scholars. This it is hoped, was achieved, in which case the visit will not have been in vain.

The programme, opened with the Doxology, followed by the salute of the flag, when the Regent, Mrs. Harshaw, made a few appropriate opening remarks, also questioning the pupils upon the component parts of the National Ensign, and their meaning which were most creditably answered. Miss Heck then gave a most interesting reading from the works of the gifted Canadian poetess, Pauline Johnston; first giving a short sketch of the authoress, and reading the inscription in her own handwriting in the volume of her "Legends of Vancouver", sent to the Chapter, the selection read from the same being, "The Making of a Chief" in which is described the ceremonies attendant upon making our present Governor General (then H. R. H., young Prince Arthur,) a chief of the six nations, which was done by Miss Johnston's father, concluding with the reading of her fine poem, "For I was born in Canada, beneath the British Flag," all of which elicited much applause.

O Canada, was then sung by the assembly.

Mrs. M. S. Madole then gave a most inspiring address to the pupils, dwelling upon any subjects that could not fail to interest them, and lead them into further inquiry. Evidences of much appreciation were tendered the speaker.

Mrs. J. G. Daly followed with a short reading in prose called "My Creed," being a eulogy of Canada and all things Canadian, then a little poem called "In a child's small hand"

The Government an educational policy for our portion of the Province and a different policy in another part. Mr. Rowell's policy to be one for the whole Province. The present law is good but administration is bad. Dealing with the main issue in this campaign his opinion the bar should be abolished all over Ontario and that few remaining shop licenses may be cleaned up by a country-wide local measure requiring but a majority vote. In reference to extending the franchise to women, Mr. Rowell would give married women already able to vote at municipal elections the right to vote in Provincial elections. Mr. Rowell quoted from resolutions of the various assemblies of churches of Canada, asking for abolishment of the bar and asked members of the various churches to carry out the wishes of their various churches and support him in this movement. Resolved by J. L. O. Canada, was then sung by the assemblage.

Mrs. M. S. Madole then gave a most inspiring address to the pupils, dwelling upon any subjects that could not fail to interest them, and lead them into further inquiry. Evidences of much appreciation were tendered to the speaker.

Mrs. J. G. Daly followed with a short reading in prose called "My Creed," being a eulogy of Canada and all things Canadian, then a little poem called "In a child's small hand" both being eminently suited to the occasion, and greatly enjoyed. Next came "The Maple Leaf," sung by the pupils and visitors.

The presentation of a picture of H. R. H., the Duke of Connaught, as a Field Marshal, was next made by the Regent, on behalf of the Chapter, with a few suitable remarks on the value to young people of a contemplation of the Duke's life and works, and his many services of the Empire, not only in a civil, but in a military capacity.

The great disaster of the "Empress of Ireland," which has caused mourning throughout the length and breadth of Canada, was touched upon, and a lesson drawn from the same.

Mrs. Fred L. Hooper very kindly favoured the gathering with a short, though touching reading entitled, "A Young Canadian's Loyalty," showing the spirit of Imperialism which animated one of the many of our contingent who willingly gave up his young life for the old flag at the battle of Hart's River, South Africa, in March, 1902. No better lesson on Imperialism could have been given the pupils.

Mrs. Finkle most kindly took the chair, presiding with her usual tact and efficiency.

The pleasant afternoon was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King."

The grateful thanks of the Chapter are tendered those who so kindly loaned their motors for the occasion.

BIG DREDGE FOUNDERS

One Man Drowned and Seven Not Accounted For.

PORT DALHOUSIE, June 1. The big dredge Delver, owned by Dominion Dredging Co., having contract for No. 1 Section Well Ship Canal, in tow of the tug A capsized outside Port Dalhousie harbor just before 11 o'clock last night and sank, while endeavoring to shelter in Port Dalhousie harbor.

The dredge was at Port W with the dredges Dominion and dy, when a heavy sea arose. The Meteor, in charge of Capt. McG, attempted to take the Dominion the shelter of Port Dalhousie, but broke all lines, and was driven ward the shore.

When the Delver capsized, C Howe of the Alice displayed distress signals, bringing the tug Meteor assistance. The two tugs sent ten of the crew of the Delver a considerable difficulty.

Although the Delver's crew consisted of eighteen men, some of number are believed to have left ashore, and only one man, Peter Burt, married, of Port Dalhousie, is definitely known to have drowned. The survivors were taken ashore and placed in bed at the coln House.

The sinking of the Delver represents a loss of $100,000. It was believed that the Dominion, too, lost, but now that the storm somewhat abated, it is thought her breaking away from the tug saved her from that fate, for when drifted in towards the beach her chors were got out by the crew. not yet known how badly she damaged, but it is believed that on board are safe.

Word of the accident spread wild-fire throughout the district. Everyone was greatly excited and was hard to get details of how accident occurred. Of the crew eighteen, seven have not been located. With Burt drowned and ten cued, the seven still are to be counted for. The officials of the company and captains of her dredges tugs are confident that the seven men rescued and are either on board one of the tugs in the harbor or farm house along the beach. At night several parties were sent to visit every house in the district see if any trace of the seven men could be found, but up to late hour no word has been received from them.

Lansdowne Will Present Motion Censure Government.

LONDON, June 16. — The Home Rule bill will enter upon a new phase to-day, when it will be the subject of a vote of censure on the Government at the instance of Lord Lansdowne leader of the Opposition.

When the Lords reassembled yesterday, Lord Lansdowne enquired Lord Crewe when the amended Home Rule bill would be produced. Lord Crewe replied on behalf of Government that the amending would be introduced next week, as to be in the hands of the peers prior to the consideration of the second reading of the original measure provisionally fixed for June 30. Lord Crewe indicated that the interval fore the production of the amended bill would be available for further conversations with a view to agreement. He invited the co-operation of Lord Lansdowne in the drafting of the amending bill, and promised that the measure in question would be brought down to the House of Lords as soon as possible.

To Bed With Drum and Shot.

From the following story it would seem that the cadets at West Point are not the only persons who sometimes find taps and the sunrise gun annoying.

The wife of one of the officers there had a colored maid who was giving satisfaction and was apparently well pleased with her position. Mrs. Brown was therefore amazed when Sallie came to her and told her she could not work there any longer.

"Will you tell me why you are leaving, Sallie?" her mistress asked.

"Mis' Lizzie," she answered. "Ah likes you an' Ah likes de kunnel an' Ah likes de chillen. But Ah can't stay nowhar whar Ah has to be drummed to bed at night and shot out of bed in de mawnin'."—New York Post.

Gaucha and Gringo.

The gaucha (now nearly extinct) was the cowboy of the Argentine pampas, a half wild fellow who, dressed in his "poncho," spent his entire time looking after the great droves of cattle that roamed over the South American plains. "Gringo" is a term applied by the South Americans to a North American or Englishman and sometimes by the people of Mexico to an American.

EXPERTS FOR STORSTAD

But Public Opinion Is on Side of Empress in Inquiry.

All Preparations Are Completed and Official Probe Into St. Lawrence Disaster Begins at Quebec—Rules To Prevent Collisions, and Storstad's Actions After Calamity Are Chief Points at Issue.

QUEBEC, June 16.—Preparations were completed yesterday for the enquiry by the commission appointed by the Dominion Government into the wreck of the Empress of Ireland on May 29, near Father Point, in the St. Lawrence, when over 1,000 lives were lost. The enquiry will take place in the court-house, which was yesterday morning crowded with newspaper men, telegraph operators, and Government officials making arrangements for the handling of their various duties, which began to-day.

So far as can be gathered, popular opinion seems to favor the side of the Empress, and the bulk of expert opinion that of the Storstad. Although the representatives of the latter were reticent, it is the general idea that they consider they have a strong case. There are probably two main points on which interest will centre, these being the question of the international rules governing the prevention of collisions, and the action taken by the captain of the Storstad subsequent to the calamity.

It is understood that on both these points the representatives of the Storstad owners think that they have a strong case. It is said that their contention will be that when the Empress of Ireland and the Storstad first sighted each other the latter was off the starboard bow of the C. P. R. liner and that therefore, according to the rules of the road at sea, the Empress was bound to keep out of the Storstad's way. That is to say, she was bound to keep her course, passing port to port and red light to red light. Instead of that, it is said the Storstad struck the Empress on the starboard, or green light, and therefore the onus of proof is likely to be on the owners of the Empress.

As for the charge that the Storstad drew away after the fatal accident, the opposing story will in all likelihood take the form that the Norwegian collier kept her engines going full speed ahead in order to fill the gap, but that the rate of speed at which the Empress was going swung the boat that rammed her around and wrenches the Storstad's bow out of the hole which she had made. It is argued that the condition of the Storstad's stem will corroborate this theory. Emphasis may also be laid on the fact that the faster boat, the Empress, was going down stream and the collier coming up.

As to the events following the collision, the representatives of the collier may put up the plea that when she was forced out of the rent in the side of the Empress she naturally dropped astern a little and for a few moments lost sight of the stricken vessel. It is presumed that witnesses will be brought to testify that after this the Storstad heard the cries of the drowning and whistled repeatedly to the Empress but could get no reply, probably because steam was shut off as a result of the accident, and further that the boats were immediately lowered while the Norwegian boat backed down to the wreck.

PARIS STREETS SINK

Several Lives Are Lost in Remarkable Catastrophe.

During a Violent Storm of Three Hours Duration Busy Streets Collapse and Taxicab and Pedestrians Are Engulfed — Corps of Men Spent Night Exploring the Ruins With Gas Lamps.

PARIS, June 16.—Several streets gave way last evening in the vicinity of the Boulevard Haussmann and the Rue Auber and the Place Saint Augustin after a severe rainstorm. A taxicab completely disappeared. It is feared that a number of pedestrians were engulfed.

Another serious cave-in occurred at the Place St. Philippe du Roule. When the storm was at its height 500 square feet of the roadway heaved up and sank, carrying with it a number of persons. The whole district became a veritable river. Gas mains, telephone wires, and the electrical supply were broken off.

The quarter was immediately isolated and the prefect of the Seine with large detachments of police was hastily summoned, but for a long time nothing could be done owing to the darkness. Firemen arrived with powerful gas lamps, and with the assistance of gangs of laborers began exploring the wrecked street.

President Poincare sent a member of his military household to the scene, and troops were ordered to aid the police and firemen.

Damage Slight.

NEW YORK, June 16.—The damage by collision to the New York is slight by the company to be very slight, and entirely to the superstructure. Repairs can be effected to allow the vessel to sail on schedule on the 19th.

sion of the Empress she naturally dropped astern a little and for a few moments lost sight of the stricken vessel. It is presumed that witnesses will be brought to testify that after this the Storstad heard the cries of the drowning and whistled repeatedly to the Empress but could get no reply, probably because steam was shut off as a result of the accident, and further that the boats were immediately lowered while the Norwegian boat backed down to the wreck to help in the rescue work.

Lord Mersey and the other commissioners and assessors except Judge Routhier, who lives in this city, arrived here yesterday afternoon on the Sir Hugh Allan, the Montreal harbor commission boat which reached here between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

About eighty witnesses in all will appear before the commission, subpoenaed by both sides.

It is also considered possible that Mrs. Andersen, wife of the captain, may be called, besides a number of Empress' passengers whom the Storstad counsel are said to have in reserve, but who have not been subpoenaed as yet.

ONE MAN ONE VOTE.

Plural Voting Bill Gets Third Reading For Second Time.

LONDON, June 16.—The plural voting bill passed its third reading in the House of Commons last night by a vote of 320 to 242.

This bill was first introduced in April, 1913, and after passing its third reading was rejected in the House of Lords by a majority of 124. The bill passed its first reading for the second time last March. It embodies the principle of "one man one vote," and provides that before a general election a plural voter must select which of his votes he wishes to register.

A Triple Tragedy.

KEEWATIN, Ont., June 16.—Frank Mext, Galician, Sunday evening murdered his wife and two-year-old child, and then drowned himself, a two weeks old infant being the only surviving member of the family. Mext, who was employed on the Government road being constructed to the Manitoba boundary, was seen to strike the child over the head with a stick and throw the body into the race way. When the mother tried to protect the child he threw her into the water and then jumped in.

Fireman Drowned.

ST. CATHARINES, June 16.—Wm. Nixon, aged 17 years, a fireman on the steamer Keypoint of Montreal, was seized with cramps while swimming in Port Dalhousie harbor and sank just as a line was thrown to him. His body was later recovered. Nixon's mother lives in Belfast, Ireland; a brother David, Detroit; and a sister, Mrs. Adam Miller, at Stayner, Ont.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury!

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by druggists. Price 75c per bottle. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

The quarter was immediately isolated and the prefect of the Seine with large detachments of police was hastily summoned, but for a long time nothing could be done owing to the darkness. Firemen arrived with powerful gas lamps, and with the assistance of gangs of laborers began exploring the wrecked street.

President Poincaré sent a member of his military household to the scene, and troops were ordered to aid the police and firemen.

About the same time a large section of the roadway in the Place St. Augustin suddenly collapsed. A passing taxicab was engulfed. Eyewitnesses saw a woman's hand waving from the vehicle, and the head of the chauffeur as the taxicab disappeared. Almost immediately a great block of stone fell upon it. A large wagonette just missed the same fate, the hind wheels sinking axle-deep in the soil, but the occupants made their escape.

Almost at the beginning of the storm, the roadway at the junction of the Rue Tronchet, the Rue Auber and the Boulevard Haussmann, one of the busiest sections of Paris, disappeared, leaving an opening thirty feet long and fifteen feet wide into which the water from a broken main poured in a torrent. A pedestrian fell in, but was quickly dragged to a place of safety.

A sewer burst alongside the subway in the Rue de Rivoli, putting it out of commission. Another burst in the Rue Boissy d'Anglas, carrying away many feet of the pavement and flooding the new subway line under the Place de la Concord.

The thunderstorm was one of remarkable violence and raged over Paris for three hours. It caused enormous damage to property.

PALACE INVADER GETS OFF.

King George Pleads For Youth Who Dodged the Guard.

LONDON, June 16.—George Pike, the engineer's assistant, who on June 7 invaded Buckingham Palace and wandered about for several hours in the building, was released by the police magistrate when brought up before the court yesterday. The defendant gave a bond that he would be of good behavior in future.

The leniency shown by the magistrate was due to the intervention of King George himself, who pleaded that the man should not be punished severely.

Sizing Up Commissioners' Office.

LONDON, June 16.—In the course of an interview yesterday, Hon. G. H. Perley stated that the sole object of his visit is to make a full inquiry into the workings of London department upon which he would report to the Government, but he added there were other matters to attend to. Asked if any of these related to Imperial defence he said "no."

become law—but that was not what the Government wanted. The Government wanted the bill killed, and sufficient of its friends in the Senate were on guard to see that its desire was accomplished. The Government had introduced the legislation in order by a bluff, to help some of its friends in Ontario, but it took care to see that the measure was defeated in the Senate so that the Premier and his colleagues would not have to accept the responsibility of having placed on statute books a piece of unprecedented legislation which was unpopular throughout the country except in some portions of Ontario.

How deliberate and cold-blooded was the Government's game was shown when the vote was taken in the Senate. Contrary to all custom, Senator Loughheed, the Government leader, suggested that the Liberal votes be taken first. To the man on the streets, perhaps, the suggestion might seem innocent enough but it is full of significance when the Government's game is understood. If the Liberal votes were taken first and were sufficient in number to kill the bill, the Government's desire would have been accomplished. The Conservative senators could have voted for the bill in full force, knowing that the Government's ends had already been attained, and knowing that their friends in the Commons could place the blame for the defeat of the bill upon the Liberals and thus make party capital in Ontario for the next elections. If there were not quite enough Liberal senators opposing the measure to kill it, then one or two bolters on the Tory side could make up the deficiency, thus serving the Government's purpose without hurting the party greatly.

But Senator Loughheed's move was too transparent. The Liberals insisted that the vote be taken in the regular way. Afraid to take any chance lest the bill slip through, enough Conservative senators to ensure the measure's defeat hastened to declare against it. Their votes did the trick. The bill was killed. By supporting the bill, these Conservative senators could have ensured its passage. By opposing it, they ensured its defeat. Fourteen Liberals, headed by Senator Bostock, the Liberal leader, supported the bill. On the other hand, only eleven Conservatives voted for the measure.

The Government's trickery was mean and callous and brutal. The introduction of the bill buoyed up the hopes of thousands in Ontario. Those people trusted the good faith of the Government. They did not know that from the first they were marked out to be victims of cold-blooded chicanery by men who professed to be their friends. But that was their position. The Government had hoped that the Liberal senators would kill the bill. When that hope proved unfounded, the Conservative senators did the work themselves. The Government's game of double-cross was played to the finish by Conservatives.

PRINCE IS VICTORIOUS.

Albanian Ruler Personally Heads Government Forces.

DURAZZO, Albania, June 16.—Albanian Government troops, under the personal leadership of Prince William, yesterday repulsed a strong attack on the Albanian capital by Mussulman insurgents.

At the outset of the fighting the insurgents gained an advantageous position, but after Col. Thomson, the Dutch commander of the gendarmerie, had been killed, Prince William placed himself at the head of the defenders, who succeeded in silencing the rifle and military fire of the attacking force after three hours' fighting.

Chilly Text.

Mother—Tommy, what was the golden text at Sunday school today? Tommy (who lives in Alaska)—Let me see. Oh, yes! "Many are cold, but few are frozen."—Judge.

"A wise man contents himself with doing as much good as his situation allows him to do."—Lord Bellingham.

nce themselves had been accepted by the Father, and that henceforth they might count themselves members of the Seed of Abraham, who one day would bless all humanity.

The Apostles were to bear witness to Jesus' resurrection. Hence when Saul of Tarsus was given Judas' place, it was proper that he also should be able to bear that witness. His experience on the road to Damascus convinced him, not only that Jesus had risen from the dead, but that He was Messiah.

Extremes of Humiliation and Exaltation.

The Pastor then showed that the descent of the Logos to the human plane and the ascension of Christ to the Divine plane were related as cause and effect. Our Lord now fills the highest position in the Universe, next to the Father. To suppose that our Lord went to Heaven a man is to mistake the significance of His title, Son of Man, which He maintains as identifying Him with His great redemptive work for humanity. To suppose that He is still a man is to overlook the Scriptural statement that man is "a little lower than the angels," and that since our Lord's ascension both angels and men are commanded to worship Him.

As usual, the Pastor discussed all texts bearing upon this point and fully sustained his position. He went into details respecting the transfer of the Logos from Heavenly to earthly conditions, and proffered his hearers, free upon application, a treatise entitled "The Undeified One," which he believes shows scientifically the process by which the Logos was changed from spirit to human conditions, yet preserved immaculate.

A Multitude of Captives.

Then the Pastor considered his text, which figuratively represents Jesus' ascension as the triumph of a great Conqueror, he said. Sin and Death had gained ascendancy over Adam and his race, and had brought them down to the dust—mentally, morally and physically. Moreover, this victory had been won legally—by one man's disobedience. But the Logos was made flesh, proved Himself competent to pay the sinner's ransom-price, and paid the penalty. Having finished His sacrificial work, He was again received to the spirit plane, and exalted to the right hand of God.

The speaker depicted our Lord as returning to the Heavenly state, acclaimed of the Heavenly host. Far down the centuries, the prophetic eye saw following Him, first the Church, the Royal Priesthood, delivered from the power of Sin and Death; and next the millions upon millions of humanity, rescued from bondage to corruption. The prophetic pen, he declared, foretells that countless hosts of every nation will be delivered from Sin and Death, through the merit of Jesus' blood.

CORD BEDS OF OLD

Traps in Whose Bulbous Depths
Sleep Was Once Wooded.

PUTTING ONE UP WAS AGONY.

The Job Required the Services of Two or Three Husky Men and Was an Athletic Feat Beside Which a Wrestling Match Was Child's Play.

"I came across a bed wrench at a second hand curiosity shop uptown the other day," said an old timer, "and it took me back to the boyhood days at one jump.

"Don't know what a bed wrench is? Of course you don't. Nobody born of this generation does. That's because they never had to put up a cord bedstead—had the privilege of sleeping in the bed it held.

"The cord bedstead was a joy. Next to putting up the stovepipe or putting down the carpet with the base of a flatiron for a hammer to pound the leather headed tacks in with, the assembling of the cord bedstead of our daddies was the job that called for the most peremptory giving of all the Christian virtues a vacation until the job was done.

"The cord bedstead was the favorite bedstead of commerce in those days. Briefly described, there were four posts of any height or girth to suit the person or his pocket. Anywhere from three to four feet from the floor a hole was bored in two sides of each post facing each other when the footboard and headboard posts were stood up to be connected. The holes were bored with a thread to take the screw out on the ends of the connecting pieces at the sides and ends of the bedstead.

"These connecting pieces were round, and on what was to be the top of them when the bedstead was set up was a row of pegs shaped like so many mushrooms. A hole about an inch in diameter ran through each of the four connecting pieces. When the bedstead was assembled by the fitting of the connecting pieces into the holes in the posts and screwed up tight and in place by means of a stout stick thrust through the holes in the round pieces the bed was ready to be corded up, and then the wrench came into play.

"The bed wrench was something like a stout wooden hand vise. The cord, a rope like a clothesline, but of better quality, was run around the mushroom like pegs, which were a few inches apart, and lengthwise and crosswise from connecting piece to connecting piece, like a big meshed net.

"But the cord couldn't be drawn taut enough with the hands, and so daddy or big brother Bill, or perhaps the hired man, grabbed the wrench, tangled it up somewhere in a part of the cord where the tautening up process was to begin and by persistent leverage around and about the bedstead at last wrenched the cord to a condition of satisfactory tautness, and the tumult and the shouting died.

"For don't go away with the idea that the work of setting up that cord bedstead was accomplished with the ease and in the brief time that it takes to tell about it. It generally required two or three capable persons to tackle the

WOMAN IN TERRIBLE STATE

Finds Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cape Wolfe, Canada.—"Last March I was a complete wreck. I had given up all hope of getting better or living any length of time, as I was such a sufferer from female troubles. But I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am in good health and have a pair of twin boys two months old and growing finely. I surprised doctors and neighbors for they all know what a wreck I was.

"Now I am healthy, happy and hearty, and owe it all to Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies. You may publish this letter if you like. I think if more women used your remedies they would have better health."—Mrs. J. T. Cook, Lot No. 7, Cape Wolfe, P. E. I., Canada.

Because your case is a difficult one, and doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has remedied many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and it may be exactly what you need.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of women—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

JUST COAX THE SPRING.

How to Start a Clock After Winding It Too Tightly.

If in winding a clock actuated by a spring you have given the key a turn too much and so have wound the spring so tight that the clock won't run you don't have to take the clock to a clock-maker to have the spring unwound. You can start it yourself if you will go about it the right way and exercise a little patience.

Jarring or shaking the clock does no good. What you want to do is to hold it up and turn it right and left gently, but gently, to oscillate the balance wheel. The object of this, of course, is to set the clock in action and free the spring from the binding restraint upon it, give the spring a little play, a chance to exercise its own power. If your own strong arm were bound tightly to your side you couldn't use it at all, but if you could work your arm free just a little bit you could then break loose. It is so with the tightly wound clock spring. Give it just a little of play and it will then be able to exert itself.

With your first oscillation the balance wheel will stop after half a dozen ticks, but that has helped. Keep this up for ten or fifteen minutes and you

A HISTORIC BELL.

From the Guerriere to the Constitution, Then to a Mill.

One would hardly expect to find an object of historic interest in so prosaic a place as a New England mill—an object older than the oldest title of the English peerage, an object made before the English parliament was formed. Yet such an object is in daily use in a factory at Saylesville, R. I. It is a bell, whose history is a most interesting one. Around the bell, about four inches from the crown, is this superscription: "Peter Secest Amsterdam, Anno 1263, me fecit."

The date, together with other well authenticated facts, leads to the belief that the bell was long used in a convent belfry in England and was taken therefrom for public use during the reformation. But the connecting link between its life in the old world and its advent to America is the famous naval battle between the Guerriere and the Constitution.

The Guerriere, a helpless wreck, was rolling in the trough of the sea, while her brave but defeated commander, Captain Dacres of the royal navy, on the deck of the American frigate, the vent belfry in England and was taken therefrom for public use during the reformation. But the connecting link between its life in the old world and its advent to America is the famous naval battle between the Guerriere and the Constitution.

The Guerriere, a helpless wreck, was rolling in the trough of the sea, while her brave but defeated commander, Captain Dacres of the royal navy, on the deck of the American frigate, the Constitution, was offering his sword to gallant Captain Hull.

The two officers had been friends in time of peace, having often exchanged hospitalities at the Mediterranean ports, and now Hull's magnanimity shone out.

"I'll not take your sword, Dacres," said he. "Keep it."

In the meanwhile the boats of the Constitution were busily engaged in transporting the crew of the defeated ship to the deck of the victor. A midshipman reported to the first lieutenant that the ship's bell had been carried away by a grape-shot from the Guerriere and that there was no way of announcing the time to the ship's company.

At that moment the Guerriere gave a succession of heavy plunges, and the clear tones of a fine bell rang over the water.

"Go get the Englishman's bell," said the lieutenant to the midshipman. "There will be no further use for it on board that craft."

The Guerriere surrendered at 7 o'clock in the evening of Aug. 10, 1812, and at 8 o'clock the same evening Peter Secest's bell in sonorous tones rang out the hour on board "Old Ironsides."

With the lapse of time the bell, amid the confusion and debris common to a great navy yard, became misplaced, lost its identity and was thrust carelessly to one side. It found its way to the scrap heap, was afterward sold by the United States and finally came to rest in its present quarters.—Boston Post.

Ancient Money.

In Biblical days silver and gold coins were struck of such weight that one of them represented the value of a particular animal. Thus the word kesitah (used in Genesis), translated "pieces of money," means literally a lamb. The Latin pecunia comes from pecus, a general name for sheep and the smaller animals. In early times coins bore figures of a horse, a bull or a hog, together with the names of the animals pictured. Afterward, as values changed, the figures upon the coins no longer bore representations of their value in cattle, but figures, representing a rose, an eagle, etc.

A Monster Polar Bear.

"The largest white polar bear I ever saw," said an old whaler and hunter, "was shot in November, 1885, about 150 miles northeast of Point Barrow, Alaska. It measured twelve feet two inches from tip of tail to nose, six feet three inches in girth, fifteen inches across from ear to ear and possessed a seven inch skull, while the track made by the huge beast covered eleven inches in length. An idea of the size of this monster can be gained when it is known their average length is only about eight or nine feet."

cord where the tautening up process was to begin and by persistent leverage around and about the bedstead at last wrenched the cord to a condition of satisfactory tautness, and the tumult and the shouting died.

"For don't go away with the idea that the work of setting up that cord bedstead was accomplished with the ease and in the brief time that it takes to tell about it. It generally required two or three capable persons to tackle the job with any hope of succeeding with it, for in the way of refractory disposition and demoniacal perversity the cord bedstead of the daddies had the breechy cow in the garden skinned a mile. I have known the good wife to take the children and go down in the cellar while the old man and his aids were dallying with the cord bedstead in an effort to set it up and giving it their opinion of it as it wobbled, and slid and careened and skidded at tense and critical stages of the getting of it together.

"Then when it was all up good and solid and the smell of sulphur got out of the room mother used to come in and put the straw tick on the web of bed cord—the tick with the big slit in it where we filled it with fresh rye straw until it looked like a balloon all ready to go up. Then she tumbled on to the tick the feather bed, two or three feet high, with its swelling fluff of live geese feathers and almost burying you out of sight when you stowed yourself away on it after surmounting the bed with a stepladder. Then with the sheets and the blanket and the quilt and the comforter and the big, bulbous pillows the bed was ready to sleep in.

"That's what a bed wrench is, and that's the cord bedstead it wrenched. And when I hear some reminiscent old body harking back to the days of the bed wrench and the cord bedstead and declare that when it comes to going to bed at night sure of a sleep in ease and comfort and of getting up next morning never so refreshed give him every time, b'gosh, the old cord bedstead with nothing between the ropes and him but the straw tick and the feather bed instead of the new fangled springs and hair mattresses, I greet him with joy, grasp his hand warmly and gently but firmly tell him he's a liar."—New York Sun.

Prisoners' Fasts.

Hunger strikes are evidently no modern idea, as evinced by the following entry in Evelyn's diary of July 8, 1656: "I had the curiosity to visit some Quakers here (Ipswich) in prison. One of these was said to have fasted twenty days, but another, endeavoring to do the like, perished on the tenth, when he would have eaten, but could not."—London Chronicle.

AERIAL PANTRIES.

How the Meat Supply Is Kept Safe in One Alaskan Town.

"Very patriotic lot of people live here, I see," is the remark made by almost every newcomer to the frontier town of Knik, Alaska, at the head of Cook's inlet, when they see that almost every house is supplied with a flagpole.

And they are right about the patriotism, but it just happens that the poles are not for flags, but for meat.

Knik is on the trail to Iditarod and the Kuskokwim valley, and in the summer the sled dogs and the flies are so thick that it is impossible to keep meat in ordinary caches near the ground.

There is no butcher shop in Knik and the only fresh meat is moose or Alaska sheep brought in by the hunters. It's very handy for the housewives of Knik to have the meat supply of the town up in the air. If hubby has poor luck with his gun and the supply runs out, all she has to do is to go to the door, pick out her neighbor who has the largest supply on hand and go borrow a steak or two.

The meat is fastened securely to a rope and it is run up to the top of the pole very much the same as a flag would be.—Milwaukee Journal.

Bullets That Come Back.

Speaking about a purchase of a large quantity of zinc instead of sheet lead for the manufacture of coffins, two men interested in metals joined in the following discussion:

"That is a final consumption," said one. "That metal never comes back into the market." "There are others," replied his friend, "shot and bullets, for example." "You are only partially correct," replied the first. "Some of the bullets come back. They are so economical and so well organized in Germany that after military target practice the soldiers have to pick up and account for all the lead they have fired. They are no theorists about conservation over there. They are practitioners."—Engineering and Mining Journal.

Mr. J. D. Wagar, Mr. E. Clancy and Miss Blanche Husband have been renewing their houses with a coat of paint which adds greatly to the appearance of them all.

Rev. Horton, a former pastor of this place, is renewing acquaintances around here.

A number of young people furnished music during the night of the twelfth for Mr. R. H. Wagar. The music consisted of shooting off guns, ringing cowbells, pounding tin pans and old iron etc. We are sure the inhabitants of the house appreciated it very much.

Miss Fern Deline spent Sunday visiting relatives at Yarker.

Mrs. German Wagar entertained a number of her relatives on Tuesday, June 9th, by giving a birthday dinner for her father, Mr. Chester Brown, it being his seventy-ninth birthday. Among the guests present were Mr. Caleb Brown, of Murvale, and his daughter, Mrs. Elmore Raymond. Mr. and Mrs. John Love, Mrs. Judson Vanners and Mrs. R. H. Wagar were also present. A SIX MONTHS' HOIST.

During April and May a great n poor cows have been milked, giving in some cases, only 600 pounds milk and 17 pounds of fat in month; some have contented themselves with producing even less than this.

One wonders if the owners of cows are contented with records that, and if the owners of the var factories concerned are content to their plants be run with such support.

It is a common occurrence to groups of 50 and 100 cows at a tory gaining on the average 300 poi of milk more than similar groups plying the same factory.

Supposing a factory is supported only 200 cows it should thus be comparatively easy to have an three thousand six hundred dol flowing through it in six months the patrons if they had better co That is a good "six months' hoi

METHODISTS

(The Christian Guardian.)
In the present Ontario election there can be no legitimate doubt as to which way the liquor trade will vote. It is generally recognized, we think, that the liquor trade will vote solidly against Mr. Rowell. There may be a few exceptions, although we confess we have heard of none; but we are reasonably certain, unless all signs fail that Mr. Rowell will poll very few liquor votes. The organized liquor trade, with all the wealth it can command, with its millions of dollars invested in breweries, distilleries, liquor shops and liquor-selling hotels, will be thrown into the scale against the man who has dared to pledge himself to "abolish the bar." As to this fact we do not think there can be any reasonable doubt.

What will Methodism do? Here we have a political leader, a well-known Methodist worker, who has taken his political life in his hand, and, at the call of the Churches themselves, has thrown down the gauntlet to this immensely wealthy and tremendously powerful traffic. Shall we stand by him or not? The politicians who know something of human nature, have no doubt of the result in the case, i.e., if the churches do not give Mr. Rowell most unexpected and unprecedented support. The World of Toronto declares that "Mr. Rowell loses at least as many Liberal votes over this issue as he gains Conservative," and probably most politicians will agree with this statement, and some Liberals are joining with Conservatives in declaring that Mr. Rowell has made a mistake.

But if there is any mistake the Churches, and not Mr. Rowell, have made it. We long ago voted out the bar, so far as great temperance gatherings and strong resolutions from all kinds of church assemblies could do it, and the question is whether now, when our votes will count, we are prepared to say at the polls what we have been saying for years in our churches and our prayers.

The chief issue in this campaign is not the Hydro-electric, nor workmen's compensation, nor the development of New Ontario; neither is it Sir James Whitney nor Mr. Rowell; it is simply the issue to which the temperance forces in Ontario committed themselves years ago—the abolition of the licensed bar. It is useless, and worse than useless, to argue that the shops will still be left, for we know, and the liquor men know, that the vote which blots out the bar will not long allow the shops to survive.

We can afford possibly to forget parties and to forget men, but we cannot afford to forget this one supreme issue, and if any temperance voter is in doubt as to his duty we would suggest that he ask himself on which side the bar-room and its habitués, and the whole liquor trade in general, are ranging themselves. We venture to say that it is not on the side of the abolition of the bar. Can we afford to vote on the same side as the distillers, the brewers and the liquor-sellers? We do not think we can.

In the Counties of Lennox, Hastings and Prince Edward they found, however, the prices asked for farms they would have liked to purchase too high, and in New Brunswick where they also went they considered certain conditions worse than here and they will now likely be content to remain our Co. USE DOGS AS BLANKETS.

How French Knife Grinders Keep Warm While at Work.

Every visitor to one of the great Paris stores will have noticed counters covered with table cutlery of the characteristic French pattern—broad, curved blades and horn or black bone handles, excellent steel and very cheap. Almost all this is made at Thiers and by hand. But there is no external sign of manufacture, and a traveler might pass through the town without suspecting a great industry.

The swift flowing Duroile supplies power at the bottom of a deep and narrow gorge, on the steep side of which the apparently sleepy town is built. At one story below street level we came to the forges of the chief firm. Here, with extraordinary quick- ness and skill the knives are hand- forged—blade, hilt and tang—from steel bar, then tempered one by one, and two stories lower down, at river level, in a long, dark, damp cellar, they are ground, and it is the method of this process, unique so far as I know, that makes the industry of Thiers worth a moment's description.

The river turns a score of emery wheels about a yard in diameter, and above each of these is a narrow, sloping platform six feet long and two wide. Along each of these, flat and face downward, lay a grinder, man or woman, grasping a blade by the two ends and pressing it by the whole weight of the body against the revolving wheel just below. The long row of stretched out bodies gave a grim impression of something between a field hospital and a mortuary.

The foreman assured us that it was much easier work thus to press against the wheel by one's weight than to sit and press by the force of one's arms. But to lie thus almost motion- less all day long in a dank cellar, far below the ground level, is about as dreary and unhealthy a way for a hu- man being to pass his life as can be imagined. The place itself cannot be warmed, but to keep at least a little heat in their bodies and stave off rheumatism as long as possible the grinders have adopted the extraordi- nary expedient of training dogs to lie all day upon them—dogs of all sorts and sizes. There they lay, curled up on the backs of their owners' thighs, living hot bottles.—Sir Henry Norman in Scribner's.

Several transfers of real estate have lately again taken place in this vicinity. Wm. Chatson, proprietor of the Chatson House, which was this spring destroyed by fire, sold his village property to Herman Glaeser, who also owns the adjoining lot and intends to build a new dwelling house on his new- ly-acquired property this season. Robert Dool and Wm. Edwards have jointly bought from Daniel Donovan, of Balveine, the saw mill and water privilege on Hyde's Creek, formerly owned by E. DUSTBANE

Makes All The Difference !

ORDINARY sweeping stirs up clouds of fine, gray, microbeladen dust, which settles back on furniture, curtains, picture-frames and wherever else a minute particle can find a resting place. It is breathed into the lungs of the people in the house, carrying danger of disease.

Sweeping with Dustbane is vastly different. The clean, antiseptic powder is propelled ahead of the broom, falling on and absorbing all the dust before it gets a chance to fly. All the germs are killed, the air is purified, and floors and carpets are left fresh and clean. There is practically no dusting to be done afterward, and most of that work is saved.

Every woman ought to know how Dustbane makes sweeping easier and more healthful. You can test Dustbane in your own home, free of cost, through our

FRESH AIR AND SUNLIGHT INTO ONTARIO POLITICS.

The London Advertiser hails Mr. Rowell as a knight of the twentieth century, who is bringing fresh air and sunlight into Ontario politics, and is commanding the support of the moral forces of the country. In a somewhat poetical outburst of eulogy we are told that "Childe Rowell" has fluttered "The Castle of Indolence at Toronto." Mr. Rowell is said to have initiated a new Liberalism in Ontario. To quote:

"Since the reforms of the Mowat period Ontario politics have been, on the whole, wanting in large issues, constitutional, social and moral. While the Whitney government has labored simply to carry on the Ross politics in Northern Ontario, Hydro-Electric power development, agriculture, licensing and education, without taking new steps forward of any consequence, in the latter departments particularly, elections have turned on minor squabbles to a degree. But all that is changed this time. A great departure is made in 1914.

Mr. Rowell has turned a stream of fresh ideas upon the barrens of Ontario politics. Childe Rowell to the Dark Tower comes, and blows his manifesto. He has begun to flutter that Castle of Indolence at Toronto. He has raised and forced a great issue. Politics are real and alive again in this province.

It would be extremely foolish of any elector to say to himself to-day, "I have always voted Tory or Grit, and I'm going to stick to my colors." The enemies of national temperance will not make such a mistake; Grit or Tory, they will vote against Rowell. Similarly, the enemies of the barroom and all its attendant train of evils must make no mistake, must cast no conventional ballot. They will stultify themselves if they say, "Oh, this abolition of the bar is only a political dodge, part of the game of politics—a mere trick." It is no such thing, but deadly earnest, as every one knows who takes the trouble to study Mr. Rowell's career and character, praised by his opponents even in Toronto, as church conventions know, and as the liquor men know.

It is evident that Mr. Rowell has initiated a new Liberalism in Ontario.

Young Conservative voters ask—why they to abolish the bar or take it away of the people on it and he very refused.

They won't vote for Rowell because they are not go far enough and abolish only the bar but the shops and manufacturer. "ABOLISH THE BAR" HAS FRIGHTENED ITS OPPONENTS

"Machine" Made Lies, Calculated to Deceive the Honest Voter, have Made their Appearance.

A MAP THAT IS NOT A MAP

"Monstrous absurdity," and "ridiculous misrepresentation" were among the terms used by Mr. Ben H. Spence, Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, in expressing his opinion of the map being widely circulated by the Conservative workers purporting to show the comparative spread of temperance under the Ross and Whitney regimes. "The map is absolutely misleading, and gives an entire erroneous and false impression to those who do not know the real situation," Mr. Spence said.

The map has been issued as part of the "machine ammunition" of the Conservative party in the Provincial election, and, covering a large poster, makes a conspicuous showing. On the upper half of the bill is a map supposed to show the state of temperance reform under the late Liberal Administration. This map is practically all shaded, signifying, therefore, a "wet" Province. A similar map on the lower half of the sheet is one expanse of white—designating "dry" territory—with the exception of a few squares, representative of townships.

"In the first place," said Mr. Spence, "the representation is false in that no way has been taken of showing on the white squares those scores of licenses that exist in villages, such as in Markdale and Chatsworth, in the county of Grey. The Province appears white almost, whereas 114 municipalities are cursed by over 400 licenses, which one would deem non-existent were he to go by this. Unfortunately, their absence from the map does not make them non-existent in those municipalities."

"The upper map shows deliberate misrepresentation in its shading," continued Mr. Spence. "Look at all that territory in the northern part of Ontario"—indicating with his pencil the greater proportion of the Province that part lying above "Old Ontario"—"that is all shown in black. Isn't that ridiculous? See Algonquin Park all black! Algonquin Park! In which no licenses ever existed or ever will exist! Is that a fair representation, to show as under license during the Liberal regime a huge territory that never had license?"

"Look again at the county of Peterboro," he went on. "The upper map shows it shaded, when in reality it was largely white at the time referred to. The lower map shows it white—a dry county—yet, there are several licenses in the county of Peterboro to-day that would not be there only for the Whitney Government."

"The misrepresentation is most glaring the Province over. When the Whitney Government assumed office there were 184 municipalities "dry" in Ontario. What does the map show? About 23 "dry" when they came into office."

"That is an amazing disparity," was commented.

"Yes, but what can you expect? When it was to be false at all, it might as well go the limit," replied Mr. Spence. "The people responsible for that map, and I know not who they were, must have had very little regard for the truth; they must have been very hard up for campaign material, and they must have had a very low opinion of the intelligence of the electors to whom it was to be sent."

"A third offence in this case is that in its wording the map gives credit for the transformation, such as it is, to the Whitney Government, when in reality this was accomplished, not by reason of any legislation they have enacted, but in spite of the hindrances they have placed in the way."

TEMPERANCE PLATFORM OF THE LIBERALS

that. However there is one class of people who have no doubt as to his honesty and sincerity and they are the liquor people—they have no doubts as to his real purpose—and they also have every confidence that the Conservative party is the safe one for them, to whom have left Rowell's party. We won't vote for Rowell because we mean leaving their party, and they stand the wrench—not even for a moment. Why should a mere party alliance be supreme over the teaching of the church—Roman Catholic or Protestant—your moral convictions—their in danger—or the removal of a social and economic menace? Yet we prefer to put their votes with liquor votes for the retention of bars. Why?

We won't vote for Rowell because we say Whitney has done much for temperance—wiped out 1200 bars—and say it without a smile. The fact is that the temperance people of Ontario, reform and Conservative alike, wiped out 1200 bars in spite of the legislation put up by Sir James—in spite of the three-fifths law. Some good laws were enacted by Sir James, some have inspired and urged on by the Liberals, but the three-fifths enactment has been, and is, a terrific handicap. In 1907 Sir James promised that at the moment it was established that three-fifths vote was not needed for permanency to the temperance law, it would be repealed; yet he failed to even consider its repeal in the last session.

Now men—I appeal to you who know and act independently, who for every occasion can (for once anyway) leave their party—men who know that the bar is an evil—hurtful to labor—economically and morally bad—bad for the home, for business and for the province.

The Roman Catholic Bishops have shed licensed bars from almost all of the Province—they are ahead of the rest.

We stand for a better, cleaner, stronger province. There is no neutral position. You are in favor of the boy and young hood of Ontario and Napanee or vote in favor of some other man's and partyism. Which for you? We are for disinterested service for town and province.

Do you ever think of the economic of the abolished bars? Look! Suppose $60,000 is spent over bars in Napanee—it would mean this money would give six other stores an annual business of $100 each, or 20 businesses now in existence could add $3,000 each to their sales—this is how it could affect retail business of the town. But how it affects the home—less money to buy comforts and necessities, less family—less work done and less money earned, because of big heads and bad stomachs—is that good business policy? Abolish the bars (both in the club and in the home) is a wise, sensible policy for the town, the province, and the boy.

Well, has the real best interests of the men and the province at heart. I like your vote as a protest against extravagance and in favor of economy.

A Father's Reason For Wiping Out Bar.

Dunnville, June 12.—Another evidence of the movement on the part of Conservative temperance men to support the policy of "abolish the bar" was given here yesterday afternoon by Mr. D. Z. Gibson, Liberal candidate. The story, as told by Mr. Gibson, is that he was canvassing a Conservative farmer who had a family of four boys. "I am going to vote Liberal for the first time in my life, Gibson," he said, "on the temperance question. I don't want one of those boys to be in a position later in life, if he falls a prey to the liquor traffic, to say, 'Well, father, you had the chance once to wipe it out and you thought more of your party than you did of me.' That is why I am going to vote for you, Gibson."

The following is the policy upon which we ask the electors to pass judgment :

1. The immediate abolition of the bar, including therein the abolition of all hotel and club licenses and therefore with the treating system.
 2. Such other restrictions upon the residue of the liquor traffic as experience may show to be necessary to limit its operations and effective to remedy its evils. Local option to be maintained as a means of wiping out the residue of the retail trade where the electors so decide.
 3. The strict enforcement of the law by officials in sympathy with the enforcement, and the elimination of political influence from the administration of the law.
 4. The regulation and inspection of all houses of public entertainment, so as to insure reasonable accommodation for the travelling public.
- This policy means :
- Hotel liquor licenses. Every one wiped out. This means that liquor cannot be sold anywhere on the premises.
 - Club liquor licenses. Every one wiped out.
 - Treating system. Abolished.
 - Shops are dealt with, but in a different way from bars ;

1. They will come under further restrictions.
2. They can be wiped out by local option on a majority vote where the electors so decide.
3. New shop licenses cannot be issued in the place of bar licenses abolished.

Note—In nine-tenths of the municipalities of the province there are at present no shop licenses.

IN NINE-TENTHS OF THE MUNICIPALITIES THEREFORE, OUR POLICY MEANS THE COMPLETE ABOLITION OF THE RETAIL SALE OF LIQUOR.

"The pledge I made in 1911 is now redeemed, and the responsibility rests upon the electors of this province to say whether the open bar shall continue in our midst or be forever wiped out."

"I now make this further promise and pledge to the electors of the province :

"If the electors express their approval of this policy by returning us to power, in the next session of the legislature legislation will be enacted which will give full effect to the policy I have now laid down before you."

DOMINION ALLIANCE POLICY.

"The policy we propose is that adopted unanimously, irrespective of party affiliations, by the organized temperance and christian forces of the province in 1902, and passed upon by the successive governments of the province from that day to this. In the manifesto of the Dominion Alliance preceding the general election of 1905 the following statement appears :

"We again affirm that the legislation which public opinion will warrant and which the legislature should pass, is for the abolishment of the barroom and the treating system, and drinking in clubs, and the imposition of such restrictions on the liquor traffic as would most effectively curtail its operations and remedy its evils."

This was repeated in the manifesto of 1911.

"That for which the organized temperance and christian forces of the province have worked and prayed for years is now within their reach, and it rests with them to say whether the open bar shall be continued or forever wiped out. We are fighting the organized liquor interests and all the money and resources they can command. Now is the most critical hour of the fight. On which side will your vote and influence be cast? For the liquor interests and the open bar, or for the boy, the home, the church, the state? I believe the conscience of Ontario is against the open bar. To that conscience I appeal with confidence. Every vote cast in this election is a vote for or against the bar. Which will yours be? We are fighting your fight. We ask every man and every woman to do their utmost from now until June 29th, and if you do, the open bar in Ontario will be forever wiped out."

AS BUSINESS MEN SEE IT

"Morals and sentiment aside—as a straight business proposition—liquor should be lugged to limbo." So declares Glen Buck, the business expert, in the Caxton Magazine. He adds : "It's a factor for inefficiency that business cannot much longer tolerate. It is responsible for a direct and tangible waste that no arithmetic can compute. It is a disastrously expensive drag chained to the leg of progress. The heads of ten large American industries recently submitted, to a popular magazine lists of the qualifications they deemed necessary for success in business. The lists differed materially except in one striking respect—they all agreed that health was the first qualification. And right they were everlastingly right. Success has its basis in the healthy human animal. Business needs—more than anything else—the zest and snap and vigor and clearheadedness that come from systems in shape. An abundance of good health means an abundance of opportunity. No one yet ever had too much of the one or the other. And no one ever found them down Whiskey Row. Good health and good whiskey are never good neighbors. Bad health and bad whiskey are bed-fellows. The man who goes to work in the morning with the sparkle gone out of his eye, the bloom out of his brain, and the snap out of his system fails to take with him the things he needs most, and thereby cheats his business, his employer, himself—himself most of all."

BY MRS. ALEXANDER

"I assure you, Captain Shirley is a capital partner," put in Mrs. Ruthven.

Then addressing him, she added: "The rooms are filling rapidly. Give me your arm, and I will join Lady Dorrington. He shall return directly, Miss L'Estrange."

"Well," said Winton, who had exchanged a nod of recognition with Shirley, "I think you might have given me the first quadrille, any idiot can walk through a quadrille!"

"You know I could not ask you," said Nora, glancing up into his eyes with a bright, amused sparkle in her own. "And as you said nothing about it, I never thought you would dignify to dance."

"I don't suppose you ever gave me a thought, and you are right: I have stiffened too much and too soon into elderly ways, to be a fit partner for a creature like you."

"Mr. Winton," with an air half mocking, half kindly, "will you do me the honor of dancing the first quadrille?" and she handed him her programme, from which he perceived that the first dance was a waltz, the second a quadrille.

Mark Winton flushed through his sun-tanned skin, as he returned the correct reply:

"Most happy! Where shall I find you?" he added, eagerly, as he saw Shirley returning.

"Here," she said, "I shall return to this room," and she was gone.

Mrs. Ruthven's triumph began with the dancing. Though some of the county grandees were present, the host opened the ball with her, and he had never before been so charming, or so devoted in his attentions; he explained with an amusing air of martyrdom the cruel necessity for his taking the Marchioness of Blankford, an immensely stout, talkative woman, with gray hair and moustache, to supper; but there was no escape. Mrs. Ruthven had never felt so secure, so elated. What wonderful luck hers was, to be ardently in love with the right man!

The sense of gratification gave a charm to her expression it did not always have, and the Blankshire squires were lost in admiration of the fascinating woman, who, besides hearing about her with the outward and visible signs of so much adorable wealth, might well have tempted a man to make a fool of himself, and marry her without it. Every now sought for introductions and dances, at least all the men of social importance, except Winton. And in the midst of her success, Mrs. Ruthven noticed and resented his neglect.

She had, however, nothing to complain of. He was rigidly, properly polite, when she spoke to him, but he never sought her voluntarily; and she fancied that every one would notice the avoidance of the only old acquaintance she had in the room, except Captain Shirley, and he was nobody. But of their former acquaintance, or his neglect, no one was conscious save Shirley, who had stained glass lantern swung from the centre, with a long mirror opposite the door reproduced the charming effect of the interior. "This is admirably done," said Winton, looking round.

"It must have been taken out of the 'Arabian Nights,' just as it is," exclaimed Nora. "One almost expects to see Schaharazade lying on those cushions, and waiting for the continuation of the story which Scheherazade promised him in her next."

"No one seems to have found it out. It is cunningly concealed."

"No doubt Mr. Marsden has had it done to please Mrs. Ruthven, and remind her of her Eastern life!"

"I don't suppose that would give her any particular pleasure," said Winton dryly.

"Are you sometimes taken with ill-natured fits?" asked Nora, looking up into his eyes.

"Never," he replied, emphatically. "I am always generous, just and reasonable! Will you not sit down, and allow me to enlarge a little further on my own admirable qualities? the cushions are soft and comfortable."

"I must not, however interesting the subject! My partner will be looking for me—and—"

Without a syllable of remonstrance, Winton gave her his arm, and they began to retrace their steps. "When the waltz is over we must bring Helen to see this beautiful tent," said Nora. "Tell me, Mr. Winton," she went on after a short pause, "was Helen ever young and merry, and thoughtless, like me for instance?"

"Never like you," quickly: "I wish she had been, for her own sake. She never had your buoyancy or vitality; but she was bright once, and full of feeling; she had hard lines for some time after her father's death. I often used to wonder how she was getting on, poor dear little soul, and was glad to find her as happy as she is."

"Ah! Miss L'Estrange, where have you been hiding yourself?" cried Lord Alfred Harcourt, meeting them in the door-way of the refreshment-room. "I have been looking everywhere for you; this is our waltz."

Winton resigned her to the new claimant and was almost immediately button-holed by an old officer who had known him in India. It was some time before he got back into safe anchorage beside Mrs. L'Estrange; with Nora he did not get a word till later, as she only returned at intervals to be immediately carried off again by a fresh partner.

Mrs. Ruthven, bland, smiling, attentive to all with whom she came in contact, was nevertheless keenly watchful of her host and his doings. He had opened the ball with her, and then his duties kept them apart until the fifth or sixth dance, but during that time she had not seen him bestow the smallest notice on Miss L'Estrange. Instinct had made Mrs. Ruthven more cognizant than has she such a fancy for that cold, hard, gigantic Mr. Winton?"

"A fancy for Winton!" said Marsden, turning sharply to look at Nora, who was standing nearly opposite, her arm through her partner's, but her head half turned and raised in a pretty attitude to speak to Winton, who stood behind. There was an indescribable expression of pleasure and liking in her pose, which somewhat justified Mrs. Ruthven's remark. "Oh, no," continued Marsden, "she has better taste than to care for such a piece of petrification! Besides, he is an old flame of the step-mother's, and is, I fancy, paying his court in that quarter. No matter, these refrigerated machines are not in out line, you and I are children of the sun, though chance has made us English. Are you rested? Let us have another turn."

When next they stopped Marsden bent over her and said, with an air of tender interest:

"I am afraid you are fatigued, you tremble! Come, there is a charming retreat at the end of the conservatory, where you can rest and be quiet; you look pale. The waltz will not be over just yet, and I can bring you an ice there." Drawing her hand through his arm, Marsden led her out into the cool conservatory.

Mrs. Ruthven was unusually disturbed. Her prominent thought was: "He has made this opportunity to propose for me. To-morrow I shall be the mistress-elect of Evesleigh Manor," so, leaning slightly toward her host, as if needing his support, she willingly accepted his guidance.

The dance finished, Nora, escorted by her partner, an officer of the regiment quartered at Oldbridge, mingled with the stream of guests thronging to the buffet, and while talking together over their ices and lemon squash with Mrs. L'Estrange and Winton, she noticed Marsden breaking away from a prosy master of fox-hounds, who had button-holed him.

"I really can not stay," he said, loudly and impatiently. "I want to take an ice to Mrs. Ruthven, who is feeling faint."

He went on to the buffet, and spoke to one of the waiters.

"No, I will take it myself," he replied to something the man said.

Nora thought he looked really anxious and disturbed.

"Is Mrs. Ruthven feeling unwell?" she asked, as Marsden passed.

He shook his head, with a smiling glance toward the bore from whom he had just escaped, as if to intimate it was an excuse for leaving his guest, and went on quickly into the next room.

Winton looked after him.

"The rooms are not hot enough for fainting," he said. "You have not seen the tent yet, Mrs. L'Estrange; come and inspect it."

He offered her his arm, Nora and Lord Alfred Harcourt followed. As soon as they entered the morning-room, they saw a group of men round the door leading into the conservatory.

Next to it stood Marsden, a look of puzzled surprise on his face.

"The lock must have shut of itself," Captain Lethbridge was saying, as Mrs. L'Estrange and Winton drew near. "It is unaccountable."

"What is the matter?" asked the latter.

"The door is mysteriously locked, though I passed through it only now," said Marsden, shaking it violently.

"It looks as if the fair widow did not want you back," cried Lord Alfred with a foolish laugh.

Marsden gave him an angry look.

"Let us go, then," whispered L'Estrange to Nora, adding Lady Dorrington. "I shall be in conservatory should you want me."

Another long shivering sigh from Mrs. Ruthven, she slowly opened her eyes, which met those of Lady Dorrington, who was bent over her.

For a minute or two she did seem to recognize any one, then expression of piteous alarm came to her face, as she feebly stretched out her arms and exclaimed gasping:

"Save me! don't leave me!"

"Dear Mrs. Ruthven, you are feebly safe; no harm shall come you," said Marsden, coming forward.

"There—there; don't agitate. You drink this, my dear madam; cried the doctor, offering her brandy and water. "You are right now."

"Oh! no, no," cried Mrs. Ruthven, raising herself with an effort, throwing herself into Lady Dorrington's arms; "that dreadful man kill me!"

She burst into a violent fit of laughing.

"That's right," said the doctor complacently; "that will do good."

"I wish we could get her to own room," exclaimed Lady Dorrington. "But what has become of her necklace—her jewels? Did L'Estrange take it off to rest her?"

"No, it was gone when we entered," returned Marsden. Hearing words Mrs. Ruthven left her and arms.

"They are all taken," she said. "No matter, he spared my life!"

"Who spared your life, dear?" asked Lady Dorrington.

"Now don't ask any questions. Let her go to bed," urged the doctor.

"Look here, Marsden," said Winton, who had been examining the sides of the tent. "He has cut away on the outside all the canvas, putting his head through the opening."

"Some one must have got through there," said Marsden, going over to examine the opening.

"Yes," faltered Mrs. Ruthven, who was now fast recovering, though her voice was broken by hysterical sobs. "He came from that side. I thought I heard a rustle; I turned and found a dreadful figure in a cloak, a large hat and a mask to me. Before I could draw a breath or scream, he seized me and snatched my face with something. I tried to push him away, for I felt losing my senses, as if I should then I knew no more till I saw Lady Dorrington. Oh! I shall never feel safe again."

"Great heavens! while we hesitated about that locked door the scoundrel made his escape! I could scarcely have been ten minutes away. Can you ever forgive me for leaving you?" cried Marsden with emotion.

"Can you walk, or shall we carry you upstairs?" asked the doctor.

"I would rather walk," replied Mrs. Ruthven, who was still shivering and trembling.

"Get a shawl or something wrap round her, Clifford," said the doctor. Marsden went quickly to cloak-room and returned with wrap. Mrs. Ruthven gave him a look of tender recognition, and Lady Dorrington passing her arm round her, the doctor assisting at the other side, she managed to reach her own room, murmuring entreatingly that she should not be left alone she went.

in the midst of her success, Mrs. Ruthven noticed and resented his neglect.

She had, however, nothing to complain of. He was rigidly, properly polite, when she spoke to him, but he never sought her voluntarily; and she fancied that every one would notice the avoidance of the only old acquaintance she had in the room, except Captain Shirley, and he was nobody. But of their former acquaintance, or his neglect, no one was conscious save Shirley, who had the bad taste to comment on it.

Meantime, the guests poured in, and dancing had begun with great spirit.

"I feel as if I ought to look for you and offer you my arm," said Nora, as Winton rose to give her his seat beside Mrs. L'Estrange, when Shirley brought her back. "Having asked you to dance, I should act the role completely."

"I will excuse you."

"Why do you not dance, Helen?" she resumed. "Lord Dorrington tells me you refused him peremptorily."

"It would not be becoming in the chaperon of a great grown-up daughter to dance," returned Mrs. L'Estrange good-humoredly.

"You must give me a quadrille, Mrs. L'Estrange," said Winton, "for the sake of 'Auld Lang Syne.' I don't think I have danced since the old rectory days, when you used to be my partner—you remember?"

"I do, indeed!" A quick sigh caught Nora's ear, and she noticed the soft, sad look which stole over her step-mother's countenance.

Mrs. L'Estrange was a small, elegant, but somewhat colorless woman, with pale-blue eyes, and pale-brown hair, a pretty figure, and very soft, quiet manners; she could talk well when roused, but had always the air of preferring to be still and silent. "She had had a trying life!" thought Nora, while Winton said, "Well—I will come and look for you, presently." Then he gave Nora his arm, and they took their places.

"I think you must have danced more than you admit," said she, when the quadrille was over. "You made very few mistakes!"

"I watched my neighbors, and the evolutions are not difficult. No; don't go back yet; you will be snapped up by your next partner. Who is it, Lethbridge?"

"No, a friend of the squire's, who introduced him, Lord Alfred Harcourt."

"I don't think he will amuse you! Have you been in the conservatory yet? It is really very pretty."

"No!" yielding to his movement in that direction.

Winton led her into the hall where numerous groups sat and stood about, down the passage before mentioned to the buffet, and then across the breakfast-room as yet unoccupied, where card-tables were set forth, into the conservatory.

This was dimly lighted by soft silvery lamps among the foliage, and freshened by the splash of a couple of fountains. The fragrance of the flowers, the cool stillness, after the noise and heat of the ball-room, were most welcome.

"This is lovely, indeed!" cried Nora, "none of the balls I was at in London were half so beautiful."

"How many did you go to?" asked Winton.

"Three," she replied, "you like accuracy."

"It is essential! What is this place at the end?"

"Let us explore," cried Nora.

A door which led out to the terrace had been replaced by a deep red velvet curtain, which, looped to one side, gave admittance to a Turkish tent, draped with rich, mellow-colored Oriental stuffs, intermixed with gold. A divan with embroidered cushions occupied one side, and a table at intervals to the immediately caroled off again by a fresh partner.

Mrs. Ruthven, bland, smiling, attentive to all with whom she came in contact, was nevertheless keenly watchful of her guest and his doings. He had opened the ball with her, and then his duties kept them apart until the fifth or sixth dance, but during that time she had not seen him bestow the smallest notice on Miss L'Estrange. Instinct had made Mrs. Ruthven more cognizant than any one else of the attraction Nora exercised over Marsden—the instinct of a strange unruly passion, and though nearly convinced that she was herself a sufficient counter attraction, and almost delivered from her dread of Nora as a formidable rival, she was not yet quite at ease, not quite free from a sense of the necessity for outmanoeuvring Mrs. L'Estrange, and her step-daughter, whom she firmly believed would move heaven and earth to compass so fine a match.

"At last!" exclaimed Marsden, coming up to the sofa where she sat talking to Lord Dorrington, who speedily effaced himself. "At last I have a moment's liberty, and I hope you can give me the next. It is a waltz. I have watched you floating round the room with sundry incapables unable to do justice to the rhythm of your fairy feet, till I cursed in my heart, though obliged to give good words with my tongue! Let me see your card, 'Sir George Brocklehurst,' may I go and dispose of him? Yes, do let me promise and vow three, or thirty-three, things in your name. I must have this waltz with you!"

"I give you carte blanche," replied Mrs. Ruthven with downcast eyes, almost overpowered with an intoxicating sense of delight at his tone. "Here he comes."

"My dear fellow," cried Marsden addressing him, "will you do me a very great favor? I have only this one waltz free till nearly the end of the evening, will you resign your great privilege of dancing it with Mrs. Ruthven in exchange for—how many?—two dances after supper—may I say two, Mrs. Ruthven?"

Mrs. Ruthven bowed with a gracious smile, saying: "Perhaps Sir George has not so many disengaged."

"With Mrs. Ruthven's approval. I can refuse nothing to my good host," returned Sir George, a tall, thin, pompous man, with a profound belief in his own importance.

"A thousand thanks! now let me provide you with another partner."

"Thank you, no! I do not much care for dancing in the abstract."

A low bow. "The first and second dances after supper, then?" He wrote them solemnly on his card, and disappeared.

"Then, there goes the Marshal Niel waltz! Don't let us lose time. Come, ma belle Noirmahal! May I presume to call you so?" said Marsden in a low tone as he gave her his arm and they walked into the ball-room. "Certainly in your shining golden gown and flashing jewels, you suggest the Light of the Harem. But, dare I confess a heresy?"

"I think you may," smiling softly.

"This is a terrible one. I would rather see your fair neck without its overpowering load of gems, you may trust it to its own beauty. These ornaments are too heavy, too mundane for you. I feel as if I must hold you up all the closer, lest the weight of your jewels prove too much for your strength." He put his arm round her, and they whirled away into the crush of dancers.

"How pretty your young cousin, Miss L'Estrange, looks to-night," said Mrs. Ruthven, as soon as she took breath, when they paused after the first two or three turns. "Why self," Captain Lethbridge was saying, as Mrs. L'Estrange and Winton drew near, "It is unaccountable."

"What is the matter?" asked the latter.

"The door is mysteriously locked, though I passed through it only now," said Marsden, shaking it violently.

"It looks as if the fair widow did not want you back," cried Lord Alfred with a foolish laugh.

Marsden gave him an angry look. "See if the key is in the door."

"Break it open."

"Cut out a pane," were some of the suggestions rapidly offered.

"Is there not some other way into the conservatory?" asked Winton.

"Yes, of course; through the east corridor," cried Marsden. He rushed away.

In another moment they saw him pass the door and disappear, only to return more rapidly, and burst into the room, exclaiming: "Where is Lady Dorrington? Mrs. L'Estrange, come for God's sake! The key is gone, and Mrs. Ruthven is lying insensible! Call her maid! Look for Lady Dorrington," he cried to the servants who were about. "Bring some water. Come, Mrs. L'Estrange," and in evident agitation he led the way, through a part of the house not thrown open to the general company, through the conservatory to the tent.

Winton, Nora, and one or two of the others followed to see if they could be of any use.

Mrs. Ruthven lay apparently lifeless, stretched on the divan, one arm hanging down inertly, her deadly pallor contrasting with her splendid dress and gay surroundings.

"Is she dead? Oh, is she dead?" whispered Nora, in awe and terror.

"No, no," returned Mrs. L'Estrange, taking the hand which hung so helplessly, "she is not cold—she breathes—give me your fan—she must have air—do not come too close—send for Doctor Weldon, I saw him just now."

"I will go for him," said Winton. "But look, Marsden, her jewels are gone."

"What can have happened?" cried Marsden. "Has she been robbed? Good God! and perhaps injured? Call Weldon."

Turning toward the door, he met Lady Dorrington coming in, and with her the chief doctor of Oldbridge, one of the guests.

"Well, well; what's the matter? Hot rooms; too much dancing?" exclaimed Dr. Weldon; a short, stout, authoritative man. "Pooh, pooh! don't look so frightened," to Nora, as he took Mrs. L'Estrange's place.

"That's right; all she wants is air," he laid his hand on her side. "Heart beats; it's just a swoon; keep fanning, please—can you get her clothes loosened?—all fasten at the back?—um—irrational! You had better get out, gentlemen. Are you her maid?" to a smart little Frenchwoman, who came in, followed by the butler carrying a carafe of water and a goblet.

"Oh, mon Dieu! I never saw madame so bad before," cried the maid.

"Then is she subject to these attacks?"

"Yes, sare—a leetle—not often."

"Try and loosen her dress. Here, give me the water! Stand back, Mr. Marsden."

"I can not leave till I see her revive," cried Marsden. "There is something mysterious in this seizure. She may be hurt. As her host, I feel responsible for her."

"Ha! she is coming to," said the doctor as a deep sigh parted the lips they watched so anxiously. "Get some brandy—don't let any one come in here, there are too many already."

Mrs. Ruthven, who was still sitting and trembling.

"Get a shawl or something wrap round her, Clifford," said sister. Marsden went quickly to cloak-room and returned with wrap. Mrs. Ruthven gave him look of tender recognition, and Lord Dorrington passing her arm round her, the doctor assisting at the other side, she managed to reach her own room, murmuring entreat that she should not be left alone she went.

CHAPTER IV.

During this disturbance, of which few were aware, Captain Shirley was neither in the dancing or the freshment-rooms; but soon after strolling through the hall, he encountered Lord Dorrington.

"Well," said that genial peer, "hope Mrs. Ruthven is all right again." He took it for granted that Shirley, her particular friend, knew of her indisposition, and had no himself that it had been anything more than an attack of faintness due to heat and, possibly, tight-lacing.

"Has Mrs. Ruthven been ill?" claimed Shirley. "I was not aware where she was?"

"Oh, very likely in the ball-room by this time. Lady Dorrington sent for, and I was told to say that about it."

"This is most extraordinary," said Shirley, who was apparently much even painfully, surprised. His small black eyes glittered eagerly, and pressed his white teeth on his lower lip. "I have been outside at door smoking a cigarette; the room is overpoweringly hot. I must certainly how she is. I never saw look better than this evening."

"Here is Marsden," returned Lord Dorrington. "He will tell us about her. How is Mrs. Ruthven? Here is Captain Shirley anxious tidings."

"A little better, calmer, I hope," said Marsden who looked pale and anxious himself. "Lady Dorrington and the doctor are with her," then lowering his voice, he added, "has been a fearful affair altogether. Come into the library. I do want a row made about it now."

As soon as they had closed the door of the library, where Winton awaited them, Marsden rapidly related the extraordinary robbery which had taken place, to the surprise and dismay of the listeners.

"By George!" cried Lord Dorrington. "I never heard of such daft villainy! What's to be done?"

"Her jewels all gone!" cried Shirley. "Why, they must be worth ten or seventy thousand, at least. This is a deep-laid scheme, she been dogged by some of the swindlers."

"But how did they know of her jewels?" asked Winton.

"She had them looked at or valued for some reason when she was in Paris on her way home," said Shirley; "very foolish of her, but she told me so."

"Ha! I thought you might give some hint from your more intimate acquaintance with Mrs. Ruthven; assistance you can give—"

"Is entirely at your service," returned Shirley, drawing a long breath.

Here Dr. Weldon entered, and without speaking sat down to the writing-table, and proceeded to write rapidly. Winton, in a low tone, described the position of the operation cut in the side of the tent.

"Will you dispatch one of your grooms with this prescription to assistant, Mr. Marsden?" said the doctor, without looking up. "Mrs. Ruthven will hardly get any sleep without a composing draught."

"Let us go, then," whispered Mrs. strange to Nora, adding to y Dorrington, "I shall be in the ervatory should you want me." oother long shivering sigh broke Mrs. Ruthven, she slowly open- her eyes, which met those of y Dorrington, who was bending her.

" said Marsden, going over to mine the opening. "Dorrington," said his host, paus- ing. "I wish you would take Lady Blankford into supper and keep the people going. If the truth is known there will be such an infernal row. Every one will be panic-struck, and I want them to get their supper in peace. Tell the marchioness what you like. Say I am looking after Mrs. Ruthven. Tell Mrs. L'Estrange and Nora not to talk about the theft."

"Very well," said Lord Dorrington obediently, and hurried away to do his brother-in-law's bidding. Winton's cool head and practiced intelligence made him the natural guide in such an investigation.

The gravel on the terrace was hard and dry, and save two faint, scarce- ly perceptible impressions which might be foot-prints, there was no sign that the robber had lain in wait there.

Near the spot where Winton and his host stood was a short flight of steps leading to the pleasure-ground beneath, which here ended in a thick growth of evergreens, through which a walk led to a gate opening on the high-road to Oldbridge. This gate was usually locked, but was a favor- ite means of egress to pedestrians going to and from the town. "Let us have a look along here," said Winton. "Hold the lantern low- er."

"Certainly, doctor. I have al- ready ordered a horse to be saddled, as I shall send a report of this ex- traordinary occurrence to the head of the police at Oldbridge. The local men must have the mangling of the matter in the first instance. I will write a brief message, and then we will examine the terrace and grounds."

"Where, I fear, we'll find but lit- tle," said Winton.

"Given a quarter of an hour's start, and it will be almost impos- sible to catch the ruffian," observed Shirley.

"The only chance is that some ac- complice may split. A thundering big reward is the thing," said Lord Dorrington.

"On such a night, with numbers of people going about, any stranger would pass unnoticed," returned Shirley.

The entrance of the butler inter- rupted.

"The man and horse are ready, sir."

"Wait," said Marsden.

"There is my note," added Dr. Weldon. "Tell your messenger to keep ringing the night-bell till some one comes. He knows my house?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

Then Marsden rose and gave full directions as to giving his missive into the hands of the inspector at Oldbridge.

"Who are you sending?"

"Tom Harris, sir, on Brown Rob- in."

"Good. Tell him to ride like the devil; then bring me a lantern in the conservatory. Quick. We will see if there are any tracks."

"It is almost incredible that in such a place, with crowds of people at hand, such an outrage could have been committed," said Shirley, who seemed dazed by his astonishment and concern.

"It is done, however, and very ef- fectually. I am utterly confounded! It seems a sort of personal disgrace that such an outrage should have been perpetrated on a guest at Eve- sleigh."

"Come on," said Winton impatient- ly.

"Dorrington," said his host, paus- ing. "I wish you would take Lady Blankford into supper and keep the people going. If the truth is known there will be such an infernal row. Every one will be panic-struck, and I want them to get their supper in peace. Tell the marchioness what you like. Say I am looking after Mrs. Ruthven. Tell Mrs. L'Estrange and Nora not to talk about the theft."

"Very well," said Lord Dorrington obediently, and hurried away to do his brother-in-law's bidding.

Winton's cool head and practiced intelligence made him the natural guide in such an investigation.

The gravel on the terrace was hard and dry, and save two faint, scarce- ly perceptible impressions which might be foot-prints, there was no sign that the robber had lain in wait there.

Near the spot where Winton and his host stood was a short flight of steps leading to the pleasure-ground beneath, which here ended in a thick growth of evergreens, through which a walk led to a gate opening on the high-road to Oldbridge. This gate was usually locked, but was a favor- ite means of egress to pedestrians going to and from the town.

"Let us have a look along here," said Winton. "Hold the lantern low- er."

Seeking carefully as they went, they examined every inch of ground at either side of the path, and had proceeded about a hundred yards when Winton uttered an exclamation,

The Gold Dust Twins' Philosophy

If you have ever fumed and fussed, because of dirt and grime and rust, and said unto yourself, "Oh, dear! This household work will kill, I fear"—then it is time that you should find some other method far more kind.

Of all the woes a housewife bears, one always fills her day with cares: The kitchen after-meal-time muss, is quite enough to make one fuss. What, with the pots and pails and pans, the knives and forks and plates and cans, no task of man, however grim, the half as mean is handed him.

Two little willing workers aim to enter in this household game: their job, the lessening of work, a task that neither of them shirk. With active little hands and brains they grab the irksome household reins, till soon each kettle, pot or dish, is just as bright as you could wish. And not until the chores are done, from sink to silver, sun

"Let us have a look along here," said Winton. "Hold the lantern low- er."

Seeking carefully as they went, they examined every inch of ground at either side of the path, and had proceeded about a hundred yards when Winton uttered an exclamation, and snatched the lantern from the bewildered butler.

"What's this?" he cried, stooping to drag a dark bundle from under the low-growing branches of some thick laurels.

Marsden eagerly assisted, and they quickly unrolled a short, wide, foreign-looking black cloak, from which fell a mask and a long knife, something like a bowie-knife.

"The scoundrel cast his skin here!" said Marsden, "making sure there would be no pursuit till the conservatory door was opened, and his victim recovered. Good God! that poor woman had a narrow escape. If fright and chloroform together had not made her insensible, he would have murdered her."

"Professional thieves in Europe seldom shed blood, I believe," returned Winton. "Let us break a couple of branches to mark the spot where we made the find."

"We had better go on to the gate, it is not more than half a mile," said Marsden.

"I will go, and perhaps Dr. Weldon will accompany me!" replied Winton, "but your prolonged absence will be remarked. You had better show yourself."

"I am with you," cried the doctor, who had tied a large silk pocket-handkerchief over his head as a measure of precaution. And you, Captain Shirley?"

"I shall return to the house. It seems hopeless and fruitless to search further. My impression is, that the jewels are irreparably lost. They will be out of their settings by to-morrow and can never be identified."

"Still we must do our best," said Marsden. "Come, we'll get a glass of champagne, and hear how Mrs. Ruthven is."

The announcement of supper gave everyone sufficient and agreeable occupation, so the absence of the host was but little remarked. Lady Blankford, an immensely stout personage, with gossiping propensities worthy of any washer-woman in Oldbridge, was pleased to be jocose about Marsden's evident devotion to Mrs. Ruthven, and said it was altogether a very pleasant outlook for the county. "We really all suffer from the closing of Evesleigh Manor. It was always a social rallying point. Pray tell me, was not the late Mr. Ruthven a cousin of the Marsdens?" and a long, genealogical talk ensued.

Meantime Mrs. L'Estrange and Nora had gone upstairs to Lady Dorrington's room to gain news of Mrs. Ruthven's condition, and to keep out of the way, as the nerves of both had been a good deal shaken.

"She is a good deal quieter," said Lady Dorrington, coming to join them. "She had another fit of hysterical crying, which has relieved her. My maid and her own will sit by her all night in turns, so she will never find herself alone. I have just seen Clifford, who was going to wash and brush away the traces of his search in the shrubbery. They found a mask, a cloak, and a long sharp knife."

LEGAL NOTES.

Breach of Warranty In Sale of a Horse.—A. buys from B. a horse which B. represents is sound and a brood mare, but these representations do not prove true. What is A.'s remedy?

In a majority of the states, including Pennsylvania, a buyer's proper remedy upon a breach of warranty is by an action for damages in which he may recover the difference between the value of the horse in her actual condition and what she would have been worth if she had been as warranted. In some states, however, a buyer is entitled, upon a breach of warranty, to return the horse and recover the purchase money.

Fruit Trees Overhanging Boundary.—Where a fruit tree grows on A.'s land, but the branches extend over the boundary line upon B. so as to shade and otherwise interfere with B.'s enjoyment of his land, has B. the right to cut these overhanging branches? Also, does the fruit growing on the overhanging branches belong to B.?

Since the entire trunks of the trees grow on A.'s land, A. owns the trees, including the overhanging branches and the fruit growing on them. To the extent, however, that the branches overhang B.'s land they constitute a nuisance, and B. has the legal right to abate the nuisance by trimming the branches off up to the boundary line.

COUNTRY BOYS' CREED.

In every schoolhouse in Prince Edward county, Va., a placard containing a creed for the American country boy and dedicated to the Boys' Corn Club of Virginia has been posted. It reads: "I believe that the country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made; that life out of doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work with nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor depends not on what you do, but how you do it; that opportunity comes to a boy on the farm as often as to a boy in the city; that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in the town; that my success depends not upon my location, but upon myself; not upon my dreams, but upon what I actually do; not upon luck, but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and in playing when you play, and in giving and demanding a square deal in every act of life."

SOWING CLOVER SEED.

In General Too Little Rather Than Too Much Is Put Into the Ground.

Clover should invariably be sown in the spring and, under normal conditions, comparatively early.

Broadcasting the seed and following with a harrow has been frequently advised and is successful in Minnesota during wet seasons and on heavy soils, but is often unsatisfactory in dry seasons and on light soils. Clover should not be sown too deeply, and yet it is desirable to sow it sufficiently deep that it will neither blow out nor dry out easily. Under most conditions either using the grass seed attachment to the drill or mixing the seed with the grain is to be recommended. Excellent stands of grass have been obtained by mixing the red clover with the grain and sowing the balance of the grass seed mixtures broadcast. If grass seed is mixed with the grain and sown with a drill the drill should not be run more than from one to two inches deep.

The amount of seed per acre will vary slightly with the method of seeding and the purity and germinating power of the seed. It is believed that in general too little rather than too much seed is sown. If clover is sown separately it should be at the rate of from eight to ten pounds of red or mammoth, from four to six of alsike and from three to four of white clover. —A. C. Arny, Assistant Agriculturist, University Farm, St. Paul.

The ordinary panel gate made of 1 by 6 boards with one end swung on a crosspiece between two posts is so heavy that it is a strain on the whole body of a full grown man and a waste of strength, yet such gates will be used on many corn belt farms for years to come. Here is a good way to avoid this

YOUNG MARES FOR BROOD PURPOSES

In his book on "Management and Breeding of Horses" M. W. Harper has this to say on the breeding of two-year-old fillies:

Among practical horse breeders there is much difference of opinion as to the advisability of breeding a two-year-old mare. Many persons assert that the breeding of a filly at so early an age tends to retard her development, that she will not make so large or vigorous an animal as she otherwise would and that the foal is handicapped in its development because of having an immature dam. On the other hand, there are breeders who state that early pregnancy has a tendency to stimulate the development of the dam, to increase the fertility, and that the first foal, if from a filly at least three years of age, stands just as good a chance as the first foal from a mature mare.

From experience it seems that the practicability of breeding a two-year-old filly depends on at least three factors—the breed, the individuality of the mare and the object sought. As a rule, horses of the heavy type mature younger than those of the light type. A draft filly at two years of age is often as mature as a trotting, running or saddle filly at three years of age. Individual mares differ in the way they mature, as a smoothly turned, neat and well finished one develops much younger than a rough, coarse and growthy individual. Maturity is influenced by the feed and care. A filly that is kept growing continuously

An Ohio farmer, writing in the National Stockman, says: "We prefer the Percheron breed full of vim and quick action. Have raised some 1,500 pound mares that would outwalk and trot faster than one-half of the so called road horses. The Shire and the Clydesdale are good horses, but have too much feather on the legs for me." The Percheron stallion herewith shown is a fine specimen and typical of the breed. Owners of good mares should study both breeding and individuality of the sires they patronize.

from birth will mature earlier than one imperfectly cared for and which receives a setback each winter. Finally, if breeding pure bred animals and the object sought is to improve the strain, the advisability of breeding a two-year-old filly would be questionable. On the other hand, if working with grades and the object is to pro-strain. Nail a board to each side of the top rail of the stationary end of the gate, extending two and one-half feet, as shown in the illustration, and bolt or nail the ends of these to one end of a 2 by 4 brace, the other end of which rests on a block nailed at the end of the bottom rail. Then hang a weight at the end of your extension which will almost balance the weight of the gate. It is well to fasten strap irons where the gate rests on its pivot board in order to avoid wear. from birth will mature earlier than one imperfectly cared for and which receives a setback each winter. Finally, if breeding pure bred animals and the object sought is to improve the strain, the advisability of breeding a two-year-old filly would be questionable. On the other hand, if working with grades and the object is to produce draft horses for the market there is no reason why fillies cannot be bred at two years of age if they are well grown and mature and their owner is willing to feed and care for them properly during their pregnancy.

Perhaps one reason for much of the discussion as to the wisdom of breeding a mare at two years of age is from the fact that fillies at this age breed with much difficulty. From practical experience it seems that only about one filly out of four will conceive at so early an age.

SHRINKAGE OF CATTLE.

Animals Lose 3 to 6 Per Cent In Going to Market.

After weighing 19,000 cattle in 265 shipments, government experts have concluded that the normal shrinkage of cattle in shipment is from 3 to 6 per cent. There are no exceptions to this rule, and no one can say beforehand just how much cattle will shrink in going to the market. It depends on the treatment of the cattle, the length of time they are held without feed or water, the nature of their feed before loading, the character of the trip to market, the distance shipped and the time of arrival.

The shrinkage of the first twenty-four hours is greater than for any subsequent twenty-four hours. Steers generally shrink a little less than cows of the same weight. Fed cattle and range cattle shrink about equally. There is no way to prevent shrinkage, but careful handling and good feeding will keep it within reasonable bounds.

One of the chief causes of heavy shrinkage is a too severe drive to the loading pen, especially during the hot weather.

How to Fight a Bull.

To fight a cross bull go for his eyes. I saw one put to flight in a very short time when a man nearly eighty years old was nearly overcome by a two-year-old Jersey bull, says a writer in the Farm and Fireside. A man sweeping in a barn near by saw the situation and came with his broom. The old man moved out of his way, and he jabbed the broom in the face of the bull two or three times. The fight was then over. The bull ran away. My opinion is that anything to injure his sight would have had the same effect—sand, dust or anything similar.

Some Ancient Dishes.

It is doubtful whether many of the ancient dishes, the recipes of which have been handed down to us, would be as popular as the sucking pig with barley and chestnuts that the "Ligue des Gourmands" partook of on Saturday. Have a goal—make it of two poles six feet apart, with a top crosspiece—at each end of your field. The field should be about the size of a tennis court. Have a smaller goal also in the center of the field.

Choose two captains and let them choose up their sides, the same number on each side. One from each side—two in all—play at a time, each standing in front of his own goal and at a signal from the umpire advancing toward the center, fan in hand.

At the next signal the two captains toss their balls high in the air. It is up to the two players now to keep the balls from touching the ground and to guide them toward the opponent's goal, causing them to pass meanwhile either over or under the middle goal. The only means either one can employ is his fan.

Supposing either ball falls to the ground, the player is privileged to lift it up on his fan without touching it with his fingers and to resume the play, provided his opponent has not yet reached his desired goal.

Royal Beasts.

No other race of animals can show such a history as the black oxen that draw the funeral cars of Japanese emperors. They are of a special breed and for centuries have been kept for the sole use of the imperial family.

The cream colored Hanoverian horses reserved for the British royal family are nearly as famous, but some of these animals once wore the yoke of an alien and an enemy. When Napoleon occupied Hanover in 1804 he seized all the cream colored horses in the royal stables and took them to Paris. The state carriage at his coronation was drawn by eight of these animals.

This insult, as he regarded it, made George III. so angry that he would not use the others of the breed that were stabled in London. Until the fall of Napoleon the state coach was always drawn by black horses when the king opened parliament.

terial, twice as deep as that on the shoulders, starts under the points and forms a wide jabot that covers the top of the girdle.

Some women—those whose necks are long and abnormally thin—add a high medici collar in the plaited material that ends in points just behind the ears. They attach this collar to a band of black velvet narrow ribbon, tied in front in a tiny bow. If the medici collar is not becoming and one prefers to veil the throat a stock and guimpe in white malines may be added.

The high collars of net illustrated here are wired to keep them in shape. They are mounted on net yokes which may be slipped inside the blouse.

We desire to furnish all who are interested enough to write us so that we may forward a copy without further delay. Do not forget that, over and above all the wonderful buying this Catalogue affords you, a further saving is assured in our free delivery offer.

WE PREPAY SHIPPING CHARGES ON ALL 10.00 ORDERS

This is, indeed, a feature of our Sale Catalogue that enhances your saving in no small degree. It means that everything in this Catalogue can be bought and delivered free of all shipping charges to you at the wondrously low prices quoted if your order amounts to $10.00 or over. A further convenience should be taken into account in that customers may club their orders together to make up this amount, and we will send the goods ordered on to the one address, shipping charges prepaid by us.

EVERY PURCHASE IS EATON GUARANTEED

You take no risk—at no time and under no circumstances. Our positive assurance to you is that you must be satisfied, and here is your protection, THE EATON GUARANTEE: "Goods satisfactory or your money refunded, including shipping charges."

WARRINGTON—YOUNG.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Young in Picton on Saturday afternoon, June 6th, was the scene of the marriage of their daughter, Bernice, to Mr. Stamford Warrington, son of Mrs. J. T. Warrington. The bride was given away by her father, and wore a lovely gown of brocaded charmeuse, with an over-dress of pearls, falling in three tiers from the waist. Her veil of Brussels net over tulle was made with a cap and caught to her pretty head with orange blossoms falling from there to the edge of the Ottawa, being in mauve, Miss Hilda Long train. Miss Marjory Douglas, of Hepburn in pink and Miss Kathryn Boulter, the bride's cousin, in blue. All three frocks were of chiffon tulle and with them the maidens wore shepherdess hats of white straw, tipped up on one side with flowers, a long black velvet streamers falling down over the shoulder. Mr. John Hodgson, of Toronto, was best man. The Rev. Donald McPhail conducted the ceremony and Miss Lillian Boulter, the bride's aunt, played the harp very beautifully. The bride was well-known in Napanee, and a number of our citizens were in attendance at the wedding.
